

THE DESTROYER.

She raced away down the sunset track,
Beyond the mines and the boom;
The spray flashed red on her turtle back
To the whir of her engine-room.
Her funnels spotted their smoke-plumes
Black
She looked the spirit of doom!
Along her sides the wavelets hissed,
As she opened out her speed;
They fell astern to snarl and swirl,
And writhle in her wake and bleed.
Born was a force no seas resist,
And she gave them little heed.
Away in the west the red sun sank
To down in the heaving flood;
And fast—with never a noisy crank
Or piston rod a-thud,
Her stern set low in the high wave-bank—
She swam on a sea of blood.
Into the night, when the sun had gone,
The fast Destroyer flew,
And never a side-light gleamed or shone,
As the pale stars grew and grew.
What errand grim did she speed upon?
Only her captain knew.
Through the sweeping seas she clove a track
Into the blinding gloom—
Stumpy-turrelled, violator, black—
She was the Spirit of Doom.
And the keen spray hailed on her turtle-
back,
To the throb of her engine room.
Back to port forth the Destroyer crept,
As the dawn rushed in flame;
Her stacks were blistered, her docks sea-
swept,
But she licked her lips as she came;
And she took her place, where her comrades slept.
Like a hound that had killed its game—
Exchange.

THE LAST OF THE CZARS?

There is something terribly tragic in the solitary figure of the young man who is now regarded by the more enlightened of the subjects as, says M. A. P., 'The last of the Czars.' The more tragic when one remembers that he is the favorite nephew of beautiful Queen Alexandra, and that he courted his half-English Carica on the broad waters of old Father Thames. For some time past sinister stories have found their way to the young Empress's friends—stories of scraps of paper, inscribed with words of awful warning, found by the doomed Czar, now on his wretched flight, now on the chest of drawers in his dressing-room. The Carica has not been spared similar evidences that there is a traitor in the closest touch with her own and the Emperor's home life, and, with a terrible refinement of cruelty, the warnings left about the Empress's apartments all concern the safety of her children.
The Czar has always been a victim of the fortune tellers. When in England he frequently consulted a famous Bond Street seer. It was from him that he heard that war would be fatal to his personal happiness and reputation—hence the famous Peace River. More recently, when in Paris, Nicholas visited in secret a noted déisme d'art, and she to his great anger, it is said, observed that the birth of a son would be an evil presage for Russia. Of late the Imperial interest in spiritualism has excited wide comment, and it is whispered that the Emperor fully believes himself to be in constant communication with the spirit of his late father.

A frequent cause of nervousness is tight-fitting shoes, and this is prevalent mostly among ladies. The compression of the foot irritates the nerves and muscles within it; this irritation extends up the legs; it reaches the heart, and so it continues its upward journey till it arrives at the brain, where mischief is wrought.

NOTICE is hereby given that an EXTRAORDINARY GENERAL MEETING of this Company will be held at the HONGKONG HOTEL, Victoria, Hongkong, on FRIDAY, the 31st March, 1905, at Noon, when the Subjoined Resolution which was passed at the Extraordinary General Meeting of the Company held on the 11th March, 1905, will be submitted for confirmation, as a Special Resolution—

'That Article X of the Company's Articles of Association and its marginal notes be, and the same are, hereby cancelled, and that there be substituted therefor the following Article X and marginal notes, namely:—

1. The Company in General Meeting may from time to time increase the capital by the creation of new shares of such amount as may be deemed expedient.

2. The new shares shall be issued upon such terms and conditions and with such rights and privileges as may be determined by the General Meeting resolving upon the creation thereof, subject, in default of such determination, to the provisions of the existing shares held by them and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the Members are entitled and limiting a time within which the offer if not accepted will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of such time or on the receipt of an intimation from the Member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered, the Directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the Company.

3. Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the Meeting that sanctions the increase of capital all new shares shall be offered to the parties who on a date to be named by the Meeting shall be members in proportion to the existing shares held by them and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the Members are entitled and limiting a time within which the offer if not accepted will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of such time or on the receipt of an intimation from the Member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered, the Directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the Company.

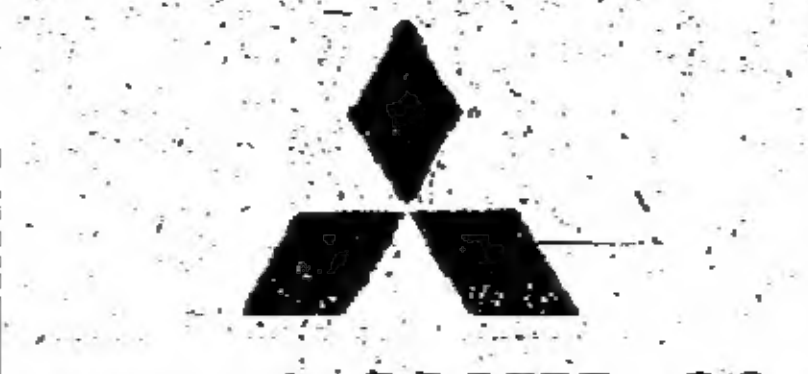

4. Except so far as is otherwise provided by the conditions of issue or by these presents any capital raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered part of the original ordinary capital and shall be subject to the provisions herein contained with reference to the payment of calls and instalment payments, transfer and transmission, forfeiture, lien and otherwise.

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

CARLYLE and Frodo were men of wide knowledge and penetration. Of different types of mind, they naturally expressed themselves in different phraseology. The rugged, uncouth, piled-up adjectives of Carlyle were foreign to the mind of his contemporary. Both, however, have expressed an opinion on the absolute essentiality of religion, for the nation, and, therefore, for the individual. Frodo says the most important fact to every man is his religion. 'If we would know what a man is, we ask what notions he has formed about his duty to man and to God. The question is more widely asked than answered, for ordinary persons repeat what they have learned, and have formed no clear notions at all; and the few wise, though at bottom they may be as orthodox as bishops, prefer, usually, to keep their thoughts to themselves.' Carlyle wrote, 'There has never been a nation yet, that did anything great, that was not deeply religious.' Goethe, who was by no means a narrow-minded partisan, and who had penetrated most of the forces and impulses which stir the activities, both of the individual and the nation, thought that 'the deepest, the one theme of the world's history, to which all others are subordinate, is religion.' Of course, these writers and hundreds of others, clearly distinguish between religion and ecclesiasticism. The latter is nothing more than the clothing which synods and priestly hierarchies have used to clothe the former, and make it more attractive to the masses. Like the fashions, it changes according to the prevailing tastes, and exigencies of the times. Neither can the schools of philosophy, or the attacks of scientific agnosticism destroy religion. As Kidd remarks 'None of the so-called theories of men and things have proved itself a religion, and never can. It is simply a series of ipse dixit of small groups of men, which have never moved men to action, as religions have.' Earnest men, therefore need not fear, either the crude abuse of the cleric, or the more serious and thoughtful objections of men like the late Herbert Spencer. Religion must and will live on. The mystery of the Unseen, the Eternal, will always appeal to the 'little less mysterious souls, which most men believe themselves to possess. Religion, like everything else which manifests itself through, and for its expression, depends upon the activities and emotions of men, has been subject to the ebb and flow which characterizes most human phenomena. During a series of years, it seems to be overshadowed by more powerful interests that command the attention of mankind. Or, the champions of the popular forms of faith, as has been the case during the last thirty years, have spent their energies, more or less, in defending themselves against the recurrent attacks of those who think that they have something more to offer than the old. But though overshadowed for a time, and apparently less potent to control the thought and affections of men, religion has emerged from those periods of partial eclipse, as the sun emerges, glorious and powerful as ever. Then it is that there has been a revival of religion. The Reformation was such a period.

The sixteenth century was a period of enlightenment for Europe. There was a revival of learning. The fine arts flourished. America was discovered and men's minds were broadened. As Hegel finely says, 'These were the three heralding events of the morning dawn, which after protracted storms, announced the advent of a bright day, and the Reformation itself was the all-flaming sun.' The great religious awakening which followed the preaching of Wesley and Whitfield was such another period, the emotionalism which accompanied that great revival was an object of scorn to the satirist and the pamphleteer, who, of course, neither understood it nor sympathized with it. But Locky and Green have made it fashionable to praise where once sneers ruled. Green says 'in the nation at large, appeared a new moral enthusiasm, which, rigid and pedantic as it often seemed, was still healthy in its social tone, and whose power was seen in the disappearance of the profligacy which had disgraced the upper classes, and the foulness which had infested literature ever since the Restoration.' A new philanthropy reformed our prisons, infused wisdom and clemency into our penal laws, abolished the slave trade, and gave the first impulse to a popular education. It is quite likely that the pride moves in that revival could not see all this at the time. They laboured for religion. Religion affected both national and civic life. Such another revival is now transforming Wales, and appears to be spreading throughout England. One of the most significant signs of the times is the way in which the secular press has recorded the religious phenomena. Even the stately and conservative Times has largely reported it, and, by its judicial fairness, in recording facts has rebuked all flippancy. The revival itself, amidst many heartrending scenes of Celtic emotionality, is characterized by great spontaneity. Although Evan Roberts seems to be a wonderful young man, and appears to be clothed with great power, the fire is not of his kindling, nor, for its continuance, does it depend on his presence. Everywhere, there is a new eager interest, where before there was more formality or indifference. Further, though there are remarkable manifestations of uncontrollable emotionality, in the practical results of the revival are uniform, and are seen in a radical transformation of manners and morals. Drunkenness has almost ceased to exist. Profanity is unheard. Old debts are being paid. Police courts are almost empty. At a football match recently, whilst forty thousand spectators were waiting for the play to commence, they passed the time away by singing hymns. This revival is touching England in various places. The undergraduates of the universities and the fishermen of Cornwall are coming under its influence. The end is not yet.

'Please step off the car with care' is a notice which appears in the eleve tram. Most people would prefer to step off and leave care behind.

BENKS (at the conclusion of a recent meeting): Old Highman's opinions are somewhat foggy.

JACKS: Yes, he lives at the Peak.

A somewhat novel defence was put up by a Chinese woman charged with stealing, at the Magistrate's court, this morning. In reply to the charge she said to the Inspector, 'If you had arrested me in the day-time I might have stolen it, but I certainly could not steal at night. I am frightened to go out at night.' Did you steal it? asked the Interpreter. 'No,' was the reply. The case was remanded.

Among the Justices of the Peace who are to be found like blackberries in Australia are some queer men. Some are highly educated; some cannot write their names. Stories galore are consequently told of their peculiarities and actions, and here is one just not from Queensland. The policeman in a bush town had put a man in the lockup for being drunk and disorderly. Next day one of the local Justices of the Peace was hunted up to try the unruly member. The magistrate took the charge sheet when in his place on the bench and read out: 'George Brown, you are charged with being drunk and disorderly. I find you're bob.' The drunk bowed gravely to the bench, and started out. The constable nudged the J. P.'s elbow and told him that he ought to ask the accused 'How do you plead—guilty or not guilty?' The J. P. called out: 'Hey, hey! come back with me; I want you. How you bleed—killy or not killy.' 'Guilty, yer worship,' replied the reprobate. 'Oh, all right, all right—I find you're bob, all the same.'

Many and varied are the excuses and defences put forward by Chinese when on their trial for any offence. One of the quaintest remarks heard for some time was that made by a prisoner at the Supreme Court this morning. He was charged with disobeying an order of banishment, and, in putting forth a contention that it was a case of mistaken identity, he added, 'Men are similar, and even inanimate objects are alike sometimes.' His remark was logical, but not convincing.

In a certain dining establishment in Hongkong the Chinese occasionally use more water in the milk than is good for the milk. The systematic test constantly made by a certain diner who has a penchant for rice-pudding and milk, and the blank face of the celestial when accused of diluting the lactical fluid, recalls the ready wit of one English milk-vendor who believed in making his milk go as far as possible. One day a customer observed some peculiarly about the milk and said to the milkman: 'You don't call this sky-blue stuff milk, do you? You ought to call it milk and water, instead of milk.'

The milkman answered politely: 'So! do, sir. I always say, "Milk-ee," which, as you are a man of education, you will know is foreign for water. I always keep within the law, sir.'

At the invitation of Mr Lam Woe, contractor, of 49 Lee Yuen Street West, a number of gentlemen assembled at a Chinese dinner given last evening at the Hang Fa Lau Hotel, Queen's Road West. The dinner was given by the host to mark the occasion of his removing to the above premises and was much enjoyed. Throughout the evening a Chinese theatrical performance was in progress and was supplemented by songs and instrumental selections contributed by a number of the guests. Mr Lee briefly proposed success to the host in his new business, and the toast having been honoured, Mr Lam Woe suitably responded.

Captain James H. Simmonds, a member of the Shanghai Licensed Pilots Association, who was a passenger aboard the 'Korea' en route from Shanghai to Hongkong, to join the 'Minnesota' as pilot for the Shanghai river, died suddenly of apoplexy on the night of the 15th. He was buried at sea on the following day. Captain Simmonds was a well-known man in his profession, having been in the East for many years. He began his sea career in the Aberdeen White Star Line, and was afterwards in the Orient Line, and then joined Messrs Butterfield & Swire. He has been a member of the Shanghai Licensed Pilots Association for the past four and a half years. He was much respected for his genial disposition and his ability in his profession. His wife, who was accompanying him on the trip and was with him at the time of his death, has the sympathy of their many friends.
